

ITS PASSENGER LIST CHANGED THE WORLD.

From the moment President Reagan stepped onboard the Boeing 707, it was called Air Force One. It carried the President and the spirit of democracy on more than 500 flights. More than 600,000 miles. No one flew it more. So it is with great pride that we bring this historic plane to its final home at the Reagan Library. There to remain a lasting symbol of freedom.

Photo courtesy of the Ronald Reagan Presidential Foundation

The Boeing Company, in partnership with the Ronald Reagan Presidential Foundation, is leading "Operation Homeward Bound." This effort will bring a historic Boeing 707 that flew for 28 years as Air Force One to its new home at the Ronald Reagan Library. Boeing is donating all the necessary resources to disassemble, move and reassemble the airplane at the new Air Force One Pavilion at the library, located in Simi Valley, California. This newspaper ad, which appeared in Washington, D.C., reinforces Boeing's long-term support of presidential aircraft.